

Men and Women All Bent Outta Shape

a comedy sketch idea by Jonathan D Steinhoff ©9.26.18

Not unlike the manner in which Jack Nicholson as The Joker in “Batman” caused Jerry Hall as his girlfriend to undergo grotesque facial alterations in “Batman” as part of his “art”, a DELUDED AMAZINGLY WEALTHY WOMAN imagines herself an amazing sculptress of realistic busts. This delusion is enforced by her wealthy father through an “Emperor’s Clothes” type approach, arranging that all who pose for her are part of her (hired) crowd / entourage, and must undergo plastic surgery to conform to the busts she sculpts, once completed.

Because the DELUDED AMAZINGLY WEALTHY WOMAN is a terrible sculptor, in order to conform to her busts the plastic surgery alterations of those who pose for her all look ridiculous, scary, surreal, etc., though all behave as if they look normal enough.

Finally the DELUDED AMAZINGLY WEALTHY WOMAN chances upon a romantic encounter with a DELUDED AMAZINGLY WEALTHY MAN, who like her lives in an “Emperor’s Clothes” world organized by his father. The two are made for each other, as is further reinforced down the road in their relationship, when they wind up with altered faces that reflect busts each made of the other. They and their (hired) crowds / entourages are now equals in terms of having strange facial alterations, and so: All is normal.
